WEATHER OF CONCERN

Weather of Concern

- Showers and thunderstorms possible again today, mainly over mountainous portions of Northern California.
- Monsoon moisture will return to portions of Southeastern California that will produce gusty winds and wet thunderstorms.

Active Weather Warnings, Watches and Advisories by County:

- <https://alerts-v2.weather.gov/counties/CA>

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

More, mainly Isolated, Thunderstorms near higher terrain through Today, most with locally Significant Rainfall

A bit more Wind with low relative humidity (RH) mainly Cascade-Sierra Crest Eastward this Weekend

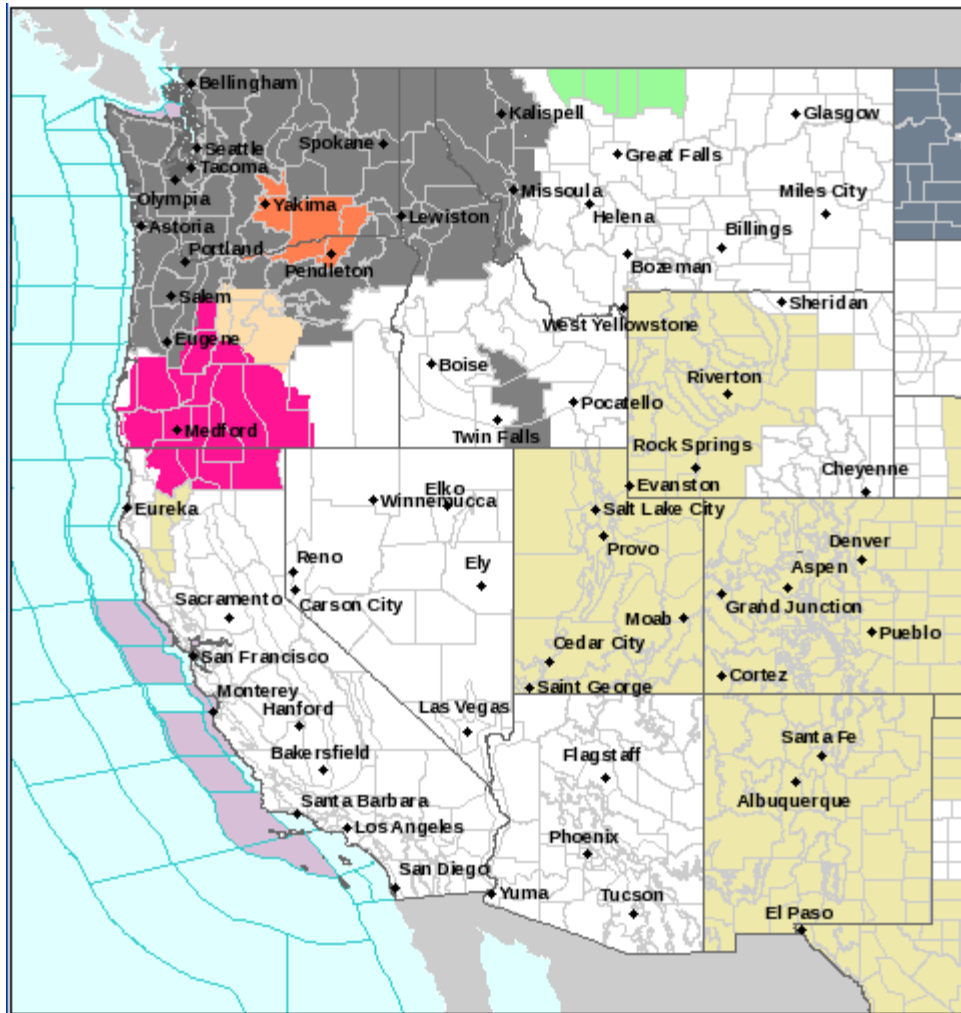

Daily thunderstorm activity will continue over the region through today but with some decrease and mostly in the far northern areas. The most active thunderstorm areas will continue to be near higher terrain north of Lake County in the western areas, northern Shasta County to Oregon in the central areas, and all eastern areas. Such activity today will mainly occur in our further north areas. Although recent reports of rainfall amounts with thunderstorms indicate they can be around half an inch or more, some drier lightning strikes are also possible, and new fires are likely from strikes that occur in areas that have not had any rain yet. The potential for significant fires will remain elevated, but higher RH and potential rainfall will keep that potential below High Risk criteria. Tomorrow into Monday thunderstorm chances will be low and most likely to occur over the NW mountains or near the Oregon border further east. Afternoon winds will become more reliably S to W and somewhat stronger over this weekend as a trough moves ashore. Near and east of the Cascade-Sierra crest there will be corresponding low afternoon RH. The increase in wind and drier conditions will encourage any lurking holdover fires to become active. Temperatures will be much cooler early next week as the core of the trough goes through. No more thunderstorms are expected after Monday through the rest of next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Southwesterly flow aloft with onshore flow at the surface will keep the district fair and mild the next several days. Temperatures will warm slightly today and tomorrow. Expect highs to reach the 70s at the coast to the 90s in the valleys to around 110 in the low desert. Additionally, northwest winds of 15-25 mph will be possible each afternoon through tomorrow near Vandenberg AFB and portions of the central coast. However, no further thunderstorm activity is expected in the Sierras through the rest of the outlook period. Minimum RH will drop into the 20-25% range over most areas each day through tomorrow, a bit of subtropical moisture may sneak into the desert, leading to isolated wet thunderstorms from eastern San Diego County across the desert south of I-10. A deeper trough may arrive Sunday and Monday which should push the rest of this moisture east of the area. Temperatures will likely cool to slightly below normal readings next week as onshore flow becomes stronger. Look for a deep marine layer with windy conditions in and near the desert during the afternoon hours by next Monday.
